

The CareAsOne Community

Connecting healthcare professionals.
Reimagining reality.

Background

A few years ago, there were calls for making our system more patient-centered and value-oriented. However, no one wanted to overburden providers with unnecessary administrative tasks and regulations in the transition phase or after that. Relevant measures were taken.

Technology became a more significant part of many healthcare processes. Data liquidity became important. Payer and provider organizations joined hands to optimize existing processes. Care teams became more vocal about their needs. Leaders and administrators started taking cognizance of the suggestions put forward by their teams much more comprehensively. New federal and state regulations focused heavily on adding value to each process across the care continuum.

The tectonic shift towards “value-based” care was imminent, and everyone played their part with due diligence. Things started to change slowly. What made this process seamless was that everyone understood healthcare is all about embracing the most relevant processes and moving forward.

However, fast forward today, and we still have a long way to go. The next step should be enabling a “connected care” frame. To realize this goal, we need our healthcare professionals to collaborate beyond the four walls of their clinics and hospitals.

It's time healthcare professionals listen to each other to set a new order for the future. In fact, recent events have made virtual learning and peer engagement more important than ever before.

At CareAsOne, we envision this and much more.

The platform is created for healthcare leaders and professionals to share best practices and inspire others to deliver quality care while keeping the fun of learning intact. CareAsOne is dedicated to the transformation of healthcare that is value-based and patient-centered.
